Election 2011 Preview

Voters are set to decide 34 state-level ballot propositions in 9 states in October and November 2011. Among the more interesting contests to watch are a referendum in Ohio on collective bargaining by public employees, an initiative proposing higher income and property taxes in Colorado, and an initiative in Ohio declaring that the state’s residents cannot be forced to participate in President Obama’s health care system.

As usual for an odd-numbered year, the overall number of propositions is well below the previous year. In 2010, there were 159 propositions in 36 states. By way of comparison with previous odd-numbered years, there were 26 state-level propositions in November 2009, 34 in November 2007, 39 in November 2005, and 22 in November 2003.

Ohio

Perhaps the highest profile contest in the nation is Ohio’s Issue 2, a referendum that was placed on the ballot by a union-backed petition drive. Issue 2 gives voters the option to repeal Senate Bill 5, approved by the Republican-controlled legislature in March. Senate Bill 5 limits collective bargaining with public employee unions over topics such as the number of employees overall and on duty, employer contributions to pensions, and health care costs; allows workers to not pay union dues; and prohibits strikes by public employees. Supporters of Senate Bill 5 argue that controlling public employee costs is critical for closing the budget deficit and that performance-based pay for teachers will improve education in the state. Opponents argue that the law seeks to undermine unions and the middle class, and have run ads claiming that Senate Bill 5 endangers public safety by preventing firefighters and other public employees from negotiating for more workers. The battle over Issue 2 echoes a similar controversy in Wisconsin early this year, and could give a hint of the disposition of Ohio voters heading into the 2012 election. Opponents appear to be outspending supporters by a 2-1 ratio on TV ads. Opinion polls show more than 50% of the electorate in favor of repealing Senate Bill 5, with under 40% in favor of keeping it.

Ohio citizens will also be voting on Issue 3, a citizen initiative that amends the state constitution to declare that no person or business may be compelled to participate in a health care system. This proposition is an attempt to opt out of President Obama’s health care plan. Voters in Arizona, Missouri, and Oklahoma approved similar measures in 2010, while voters in Colorado rejected a similar measure in 2010.

Colorado

Another interesting contest is Colorado’s Proposition 103, an initiative that would increase the income tax from 4.63% to 5.0% and the sales tax from 2.9% to 3.0% for five years. The increases are expected to increase state revenue by more than $500 million per year. Proposition 103 has been spearheaded by Democratic state senator Rollie Heath and is supported by public employee unions. The opposition at this point seems scattered, but is centered on Republican groups. Although campaign spending has not been heavy so far, this election returns could give an indication of how voters in this tossup state are leaning when it comes to taxes. Last year, Colorado voters rejected a proposal to cut the state income tax as well as charges on cars and phones.

Bond Issues

Many states require voter approval before state bonds can be issued. Since the onset of the financial crisis, legislators have been cautious in proposing new bond issues. In 2010, voters approved only $2 billion in new bonds compared to $13 billion in 2008. This year, Texas voters will decide whether to allow the Texas Water Development Board to issue $6 billion of bonds on a rolling basis (Proposition 2), and whether to increase bonding authority of the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board from $125 million to $350 million per year. Arkansas voters will decide whether to approve a $575 million bond program for highways, and
