Election 2012 Preview

Voters will decide 176 ballot propositions across 38 states on November 6, based on the latest information. Marijuana legalization is one of the hottest topics this year, with six states voting on this issue. There are also high profile votes in several states on same-sex marriage, health care, tax increases, public employee unions, and gambling. (This report is an updated version of the original report issued September 4.)

Overall Trends

The 176 propositions in November are up from 159 in 2010, and the 153 in 2008, and the highest total since 204 measures appeared in November 2006. For the year (that is, including propositions decided in elections before November), voters will decide 188 propositions, up from 183 in 2010, up from 174 in 2008, and down from 225 in 2006.

In a typical year, the most visible and controversial propositions are initiatives and referendums, issues that are placed on the ballot by citizen petition. For 2012, the number of initiatives is 50, up from 46 in 2010 but down from 68 in 2009. Overall, initiative activity seems to have cooled off slightly from its feverish pace in the 1990s. For more information on initiative trends, see IRI Report on Initiative Use (1904-2011). For additional information on ballot measures see ballotpedia.org.

Multistate Issues

Every year, several issues appear on the ballot of multiple states. This may happen as a result of a coordinated campaign by an interest group, or more often, as individual states respond to a common event, such as a court ruling. Multistate issues can take on life and spread across the country if they meet with voter approval initially and reveal unexpected popular support for an issue. For this reason, multistate issues are worth watching as possible leading indicators of national trends.

Marijuana

Marijuana-related measures are on the ballot in six states. The most far reaching propositions are citizen proposals that would legalize recreational use of cannabis: Colorado’s Amendment 64, Oregon’s Measure 80, and Washington’s I-502. Although federal law prohibits possession of marijuana, advocates of legalization believe that public opinion may be shifting in their favor. In 2008, Massachusetts voters approved Question 2 that decriminalized small amounts of the drug, making possession of less than one ounce subject only to a $100 fine. In 2010, California voters narrowly rejected (47-53) Proposition 19 that would have legalized personal use. Both the Colorado and Washington initiatives are leading in early polls, 47-38 and 55-32, respectively, and could provide a bellwether victory for legalization.

Beginning in the 1990s, legalization advocates pursued a strategy of promoting laws that allowed medical use of marijuana. Currently, 17 states permit medical marijuana, most of them adopting their laws through the initiative process This year, three more states will be voting on medical marijuana. Perhaps the most interesting state to watch is Arkansas, which would be the first Southern state to approve medical marijuana if the initiative is approved. Question 3 in Massachusetts gives voters the option to permit medical use of marijuana, and IR-124 in Montana asks voters to repeal recent action by the legislature (SB 423) that cut back significant parts of the state’s voter-approved medical marijuana law from 2004.
Marriage

Same-sex marriage has been a prominent issue on ballot propositions for almost a decade. Despite what appears to be some movement in public opinion in favor of gay marriage and a growing number of states that permit gay marriage, all state-level victories for same-sex marriage have come from courts or legislatures; voters have consistently voted to restrict marriage to one man and one woman when given the choice, with 30 of 31 measures banning gay marriage having passed to date. See IRI Report BW 2012-1 on same-sex marriage for more information.

This year five states have marriage-related propositions on the ballot. Maine’s Question 1 and Maryland’s Question 6, both placed on the ballot by citizen petition, ask voters to repeal laws previously approved by voters that ban same-sex marriage. Washington’s R-74, also placed on the ballot by petition, asks voters to repeal a new law from the legislature that legalizes same-sex marriage. One interesting thing to watch for this year is if gay marriage advocates can achieve their first affirmative endorsement from the electorate directly in Maine, Maryland, or Washington. Minnesota voters will decide whether to adopt a constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriage. In May, North Carolina voters approved such a ban.

Health Care

President Obama’s health care law, the Affordable Care Act, remains a source of controversy in the states. Four states (AZ, MO, OH, OK) have approved propositions declaring that no individual or business shall be compelled to participate in a health care system, what appears to be a partly symbolic judgment on the merits of Obamacare; while Colorado voters rejected a similar proposal. This year, Alabama, Florida, Montana, and Wyoming voters will have the opportunity to express their views. These states are generally seen as moderate to conservative, but the election returns on these propositions will provide some insight into how the health care reform plan is being viewed and what the political landscape looks like for further health care reform.

Taxes

Taxes remain the most prevalent issue for ballot propositions this year, as is the case in almost every election year. Voters are facing 31 tax-related measures, most of which make small changes to the tax code, such as providing property tax exemptions to spouses of veterans who died in combat.

The most visible and controversial tax measures propose revenue increases. These measures will give a temperature reading about whether voters are warming towards taxes after several years of extreme hostility. Two major tax initiatives will be decided in California. Proposition 30, sponsored by Governor Jerry Brown, increases the income tax on earnings over $250,000 and increases the sales tax by 0.25%, for seven and four years respectively. The proposition is supported by public employee unions and opposed by taxpayer groups; most business groups are remaining on the sideline in this campaign. Governor Brown has argued that draconian cuts in state spending will be required if the measure is not approved. Proposition 38, sponsored by lawyer and education activist Molly Munger, raises income taxes across the board and for 12 years, and dedicates 60% of revenue to education. Proposition 38 is opposed by Governor Brown’s coalition, largely out of fear that it may confuse voters and lead to the defeat of both tax measures. A minor controversy broke out during the summer when the legislature changed state law to list Governor Brown’s proposition before all others on the ballot, breaking with standard practice that lists them in the order signatures are submitted. Prop 30’s backers believe that listing it first on the ballot increases its chance of passage, although there does not appear to be any evidence in support of this belief.

Arizona’s Proposition 204 makes permanent a temporary sales tax increase from 5.5% to 6.5% that is due to expire in 2013, and mandates annual increases in state education spending. Similarly, South Dakota’s Initiated Measure 15 increases the state sales tax from 4% to 5% with revenue dedicated to education and health care. Arkansas voters will decide whether to raise the sales tax to pay for interest on a proposed bond issue related to transportation projects.

Missouri’s Proposition B, an initiative statute, proposes to increase tobacco taxes by $1 per pack, with revenue dedicated to health education. In June, California voters rejected Proposition 29 that also would have increased tobacco taxes by $1 per pack, with revenue dedicated to cancer research. The failure of Proposition 29 appears to have been attributable to its locking in spending on a particular program (cancer research) rather than to citizen aversion to higher tobacco taxes.

On the tax-cutting side, Oregon’s Measure 84 eliminates estate/inheritance taxes. Oklahoma’s
Single-State Issues

State Question 758 limits growth of property taxes to 3% annually, down from the current limit of 5% annually. In June, North Dakota voters soundly rejected Initiated Constitutional Measure 2 that would have eliminated all property taxes, and replaced them with a mix of income, sales, and other taxes.

Bond Issues

Many states require voter approval before state bonds can be issued. Since the onset of the financial crisis and recession, legislators have been cautious about proposing new bond issues. In 2010, voters approved only $2 billion in new bonds compared to $13 billion in 2008. This year, legislatures in seven states have placed 16 bond proposals before the voters, with a total authorization to borrow of $3.2 billion. The largest proposal, $1.3 billion for roads and highways, comes from the relatively small state of Arkansas. The measure includes a 0.5% sales tax increase to fund repayment of debt. Other large proposals are New Jersey’s measure to borrow $750 million for colleges and Alaska’s Bonding Proposition A to borrow $453 million for transportation projects.

Single-State Issues

Civil Rights. Oklahoma’s State Question 759, placed on the ballot by the legislature, prohibits discrimination or preferable treatment based on race, sex, ethnicity, and national origin. The measure would undercut some affirmative action programs in the state. Similar measures seeking a “color blind” approach to race have passed in Arizona, California, Michigan, Nebraska, and Washington.

Death Penalty Repeal. California’s Proposition 34 abolishes capital punishment in the state. The initiative statute would be retroactive, converting all existing death row sentences to life imprisonment without the possibility of parole. It would also create a $100 million fund to help police with unsolved murder cases. California is one of 33 states that currently sanction capital punishment.

Illegal Immigrants. In 2011, Maryland’s legislature passed SB 167 that allowed illegal immigrants to pay in-state tuition at state universities, if they attended high school in the state and their parents paid taxes. Question 4, the so-called Dream Act Referendum, asks voters to repeal SB 167. Montana’s LR-121 is a legislative measure that denies state services to illegal immigrants. The law works by requiring individuals who apply for state services to provide proof of citizenship.

Redistricting. Election reformers have long been concerned with the practice in most states of legislators drawing the lines for their own electoral districts, claiming this leads to “politicians choosing their voters” rather than voters choosing their representatives. Ohio’s Issue 2, an initiated constitutional amendment, creates a bipartisan commission to draw district lines, comprised of four Democrats, four Republicans, and four members from neither party. The initiative is sponsored by Democratic groups frustrated with the Republican-controlled apportionment plan adopted in 2011.

Suicide. Massachusetts’ “Death with Dignity” Question 2, an initiative statute, would allow a terminally ill person to be given a lethal injection. A late August poll showed voters in support of the initiative by more than a two-to-one ratio. Five states have held votes on physician-assisted suicide, beginning with Washington in 1991. Washington voters rejected the proposal in 1991 but approved a similar measure in 2008. Oregon voters also legalized this form of suicide in 1994. Similar proposals were rejected by California and Michigan voters in the 1990s.

Union dues and political campaigns. California’s Proposition 32 prohibits union dues from being used for political purposes without explicit authorization of members, prohibits union and corporate contributions to campaigns, and prohibits government contractors from contributing to campaigns. This measure is intended to undercut the power of public employee unions in the state. Voters rejected similar measures in 1998 and 2005 by small margins.
